About the university

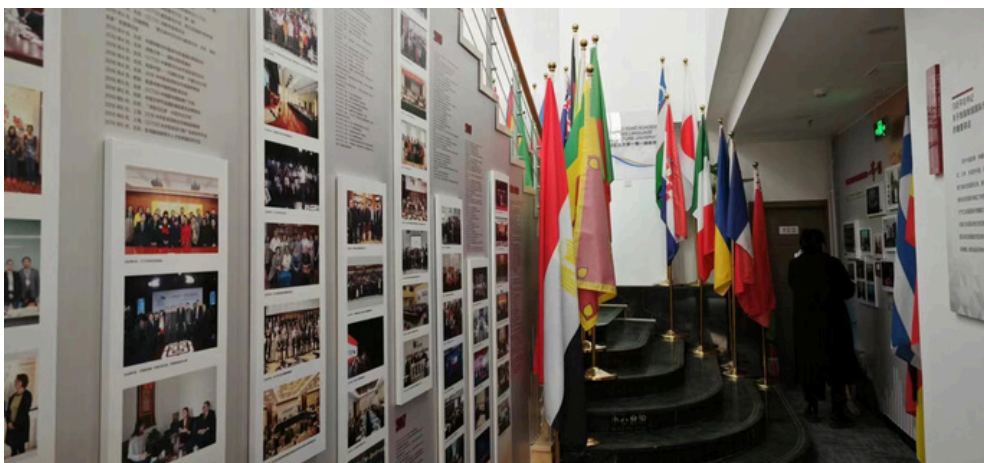

For more than half a century, Beijing Language and Culture University (BLCU), located at the heart of Beijing's higher education hub, has always been a leading liberal arts university in China with 12,000 students worldwide in undergraduate, graduate, and language training programs.

BLCU is home to advanced research and teaching in language, cultures, arts, and social science. From International Chinese Language Education to international politics and business, BLCU brings brilliant ideas and minds together, inspiring global communications and exchanges with real impact today and in the future.

To whom?

As home to the world's largest Chinese language program for international students, BLCU has trained more than 300,000 international students from 189 countries and regions since its founding in 1962.

Most BLCU students are trying to foster better bilateral relations between their home countries and China. Thus, the international approach and language and culture education are the best in the country, as the same name of the University implies.

Furthermore, BLCU's Chinese students are also studying to become Chinese Language teachers for international students or other languages such as English, Spanish, Korean, Japanese, etc. Hence, BLCU is a nexus to thrive in any language and an open window to study and understand different cultures.
